PARIS.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

PARIS, 18th November, 1882.

The abominable and continued wet weather ought to be very favorable to the French revenue; the Minister of Finance, Tivard, who commenced life as a working jeweller, has been the victim of a "sell" to the tune of two millions of francs in the estimates: he depended on that excess to work wonders, but when looked into, it was found to be only one of those fleeting shows, for man's illusion given. The joke is, that he attributed the success to the bad weather: the people keep within doors, and so must consume—that is to say, eat, drink, and smoke—more, as an antidote possibly against the blue devils. The Ministry is still in office, and that is in itself not a small matter. The deputies are evidently in a brown study: they are willing to wound, but afraid to strike. They commence to feel that the Republic cannot sustain indefinitely the game of ins and outs, and it has come home to not a few that the present form of government has lost way, in the sense that public opinion commences to remain coy. M. Audrieux, the late Ambassador to Madrid, has not so much discovered, as announced this truth, and his declaration has created something like a sensation. It was this gentleman, who, as Prefect of Police, executed the decrees for the expulsion of the Jesuits; and he has now made his mea culpa for that act. No matter whose fact may displease, the truth is, the Republic has not had luck since it commenced dabbling with religious affairs.

The Ministry deserves credit for its pluck in declining to accept any reduction of the estimates under the head of religious endowments. Nothing is to be gained by docking off a few thousand francs here and there from the incomes of parish curates, or bishops, priests, and deacons. That is only a back-handed way for disenfranchising the Church. Propose the disestablishment formally, demanded the cabinet a challenge very correct, only the minister declined to state what his opinion was. Gambetta is quite right. To decree the abolition of the Church and State would, he maintains, be at the same time to decree the death of the Republic. Notwithstanding, the Chamber dissolved in one of its sittings, over one million of francs for episcopal services, but the next moment it voted the disestablishment—one return ever to their first love.

The radicals and anarchists keep the town amused politically, though lookers on cannot help wishing a plague on both the houses. Clemenceau is making terrible efforts to regain his lost affection with the populace—but that love, like life, once lost, is lost for ever. Not a meeting he organizes, but the anarchists manage to find admittance and as their motto is, let nothing exist, they quickly clear the places of réunion. When the Red Virgin, Louise Michel arrives, she is got rid of by tuning off the gas—a plan much superior to shying legs of tables and arm-chairs at her head, as at Brussels. There is very little dynamite now employed, and even the despatch of threatening letters has fallen to zero.

Politics so much devour attention, that the literary and scientific réceptions that were once so fashionable and insouciant, are becoming things of the past. Many deputies, conspicuous by their impracticable politics, make excellent lecturers; Louis Blanc, Paul Bérty, &c. Now such feasts of reason are put aside; only politics pay. It is very questionable if literature be as highly prized or patronized as formerly; certainly there is less enthusiasm for even the drama. Good music attracts; and the diminished receipts at the theatres where buffoonery is the pièce de résistance do not unhappily imply a progress in severity of manners, but rather an indisposition to patronize nonsense at a high price, because the café concerts absorb the audiences which formed the habitues of establishments devoted to operetta and vaudeville.

The French display another change of character deserving to be noticed till lately, any speculation, whether home or foreign, if well-puffed and holding out extraordinary high dividends, was certain to find gigue; now nothing of the kind can even obtain a nibble. The resolution appears to be to invest in no scrip or stock, but to depend on the old stock and a hole in the wall, as the surest of bankers. People appear to believe there is something in the air; a financial or political cataclysm, that will sweep away banks and projects. This want of confidence is telling on industry, in the sense that capital cannot be obtained either to extend sound old, or install new industries.

In Paris the Dangerous Classes never were so rampant. The habitual criminal is at home in the capital. There is much demoralization abroad caused by the ceaseless passion to become rich without labor to put money in the purse—honestly, if possible. And there is but little delusion, and less scruple about the ways and means. No very high standard exists, applicable to men with a shady morality, because the frontier between virtue and vice has been largely obliterated. The laws are severe enough; but then they cannot be fully carried out. France wants a penal establishment, and it is for this end that Madagascar is so much coveted. The question too may be fairly raised, if the letting loose of so many unrepentant communists, hungering and thirsting after revenge, has contributed to raise the moral tone of society.

Not a night passes but some important burglary takes place in the city, and with a success only equalled by its audacity. One is astounded at the completeness and scientific strategy with which some of the robberies are effected, and yet there was a time, and not long since, when property and life were safe. The robbery recently committed at the office of the London, Chatham and Dover, and the Pacific Steam Navigation Companies, is the talk of the town. Here, on the Boulevard des Capucines, about two in the morning, a band successfully entered by the chief door, by means of a false key, and carried off a enormous sum of and carried off 70,000 of the property of Mr. Waters, who also conducts a banking business, while representing the two companies. Much sympathy is felt for the victim, while another question arises, what's the use of the police? In Paris the police, at night, patrol in couples: never do they touch a door or a shutter to ascertain if all be well; I know this, as I occasionally meet the Bobs at the sma' hours; then they are ever talking to each other and sufficiently loud to warn evil-doers; listen to their conversation, and the words, manger and argent will speedily indicate the subjects uppermost in their minds. However, the force cannot be more strongly censured than what the journals themselves indulge in.

The expense of living in Paris has doubled within the last fifteen years. This is especially the case with house rent. In the heart of the city it is impossible for a labourer to rent a cock-loft; to emigrate to the outskirts, costs him more than a Sabbath Day journey to reach his work, and there are no suburban lines that organise an omnibus train for the artisan. This very serious state of things has given rise to an agitation to level the useless fortifications, as was done with the ancient boulevards, and on their site erect cheap dwellings for the needy and toiling classes. One fifth of the area of Paris, or 3,500 acres, is occupied by a line of fortifications and approaches, utterly useless—as was demonstrated by the invasion of 1870-71. Even in 1831, when the project was presented by Marshal Soult for surrounding Paris with a moat he stated the work to be perfectly useless.

A duel has just taken place outside Paris between a French and Russian nobleman, conditions: pistols, and to fire till either was incapable of continuing. The Russian received a ball in the shoulder and another in the head; he requested to be "brought home," which implied, a sleeping car, insured against fire, from Paris to Moscow, two surgeons, nurses and his valets.

The royalists had organized a caucus meeting to aid the immediate return of Henri V. The letters of invitation were sent forth, the invited was to arrive at a certain mansion, and to ask for a M. Silence: one of the invitations, through error, was addressed to the editor of the leading dynamite journal; he went, mixed with the lords and ladies, asked why he was invited, stated who he was, and promised to give a description of the whole proceedings, which he did very humorously. His presence was like what Satan's would be at a Vigilance Committee of Saints.

The suicide of Victor Cheri has produced a painful impression in theatrical circles: he was a musician, and as chef d'orchestra, led the liveliest and gayest air of the day. Yet he was unhappy even in his smiles and joy. His sister was Rose Cheri, the celebrated actress, whose father dropped down dead on the day of her marriage; she died from sucking the matter from an incision, made to save her son in the agony of croup, and that son when a man, died from hydrophobia.

The wet weather keeps the memory of Louis Philippe, green: he maintained that no citizen ought to stir out without an umbrella. Formerly brides were presented with an umbrella; Camille Doucet, the poet, presented his fiancée with one, on which was engraved the line:—"On wet days, then you'll remember me."

THIS DAY.

The business in the Share Market this morning has been confined almost exclusively to the usual settlements. We have not heard of a single transfer. Banks are very much firmer than they were yesterday, offers to purchase at 165 and finally at 167 per cent. premium, having failed to induce holders to sell. Other quotations remain unchanged.

Some rather important sales of Banks are the only transactions, which have been reported since we last wrote. For cash a fair amount of business has been put through at 168, and on the supply becoming exhausted at that rate 169 became the current rate, and further sales were booked. On time several investments were made at 171 for January 31st. The stock closes firm with cash buyers at 169.
